After a group walk, one student discussed drinking fountains as an example of how subgroups in a community expressed their wish to belong. As well as this historic evidence, observations about what is sold in the local shops and how people dress is included in the theme about a sense of belonging – a belonging that includes buying a drink rather than drinking from public fountains. Further reflection leads to thoughts about a sense of belonging in healthcare settings as well as the human need for hydration.